

“Dear Sir/Madam

I am penning down this letter for making an application for the PhD program in biology scholarship. I came to know about the scholarship from one of my colleagues at my home university.

After conducting my own research, the benefits have piqued my interests and goals. I believe that my qualifications and work experiences will contribute positively. The degree program in biology will train me in microbiological techniques and will give me an insight in the applied areas of the subject and my relationship with other life sciences disciplines.

Therefore, it would be a great opportunity to complete my PhD at your University's department of biology and life sciences.

With the PhD, I can positively impact various fields such as agriculture, food, environment, industrial microbiology, public health, pharmaceuticals, resource management, and academia which seem to be lagging behind in my home country. The trained manpower well versed with laboratory techniques and disease diagnostic facilities is limited in my homeland.

This scholarship will give me the opportunity to learn at an international level and enhance my skills set.

It would be a great honor if my application is granted. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Thank you for taking your time to review my application.

Yours Truly,

Mary Welsh.”
